The lengthy and distinguished chronicle of Hampden-Sydney College commences with the establishment of Presbyterianism in Virginia. Although the Presbyterian Church had its origin early in Virginia, it grew in numbers only with the Scotch-Irish emigration in the eighteenth-century. As these new settlers emigrated down into Virginia from Pennsylvania, more and more Presbyterian churches were established and in 1755 the Colony of Virginia, for purposes of church organization, was erected into the Presbytery of Hanover. By 1770 four Presbyterian churches had been formed in Southside Virginia — Cub Creek church in 1738, Buffalo in 1739, Cumberland in 1743, and Briery in 1755. It was this development of the Presbyterian church that brought about the founding of Hampden-Sydney College.

Though the Presbyterians in Virginia had been supporting colleges in New Jersey (Princeton) and Delaware ("Academy of New-Ark"), at a meeting on October 9, 1771 it was recommended that all the ministers present take under consideration the "Expediency of erecting a Seminary of Learning somewhere within the bounds of this Presbytery."

The man who had been instrumental in proposing this idea was probably young Samuel Stanhope Smith. Born in 1750 in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, he had graduated from Princeton in 1769 at the age of nineteen, had been ordained a Presbyterian minister, and had been sent to Virginia as a missionary. As he traveled about he saw the necessity of local educational institutions, and he encouraged the Presbytery of Hanover in the efforts to develop one.

Efforts had already been made to establish an academy in the Valley, but the Presbyterians east of the Blue Ridge, taking into consideration the size of the colony, wished a college in their own area, and at a meeting on October 14, 1774, it was moved that a subscription be begun with the idea of establishing such an institution, with the hope that Samuel Smith might be induced to take the superintendency.

The contributions toward this proposed academy were generous, and on February 1, 1775, Presbytery was called to meet at "Slate Hill," plantation of Captain Nathaniel Venable in Prince Edward County. The meeting lasted for three days, and in its course provisions were made for the establishing of Hampden-Sydney. It was discovered that over 1300 pounds had been subscribed, and of this amount 400 pounds were ordered to be applied to the purchase of "such Books and Mathematical and Philosophical Apparatus as are more immediately necessary," the purchasing to be entrusted to Samuel Smith.

On the next day, February 2, 1775, several suggested sites for the proposed college were viewed and it was decided to establish it on the hundred acres of land offered for that purpose by Peter Johnston of Prince Edward. This land "at the head of Hudsons Branch" was close to the thriving villages of King's Tavern and Prince Edward Court House (now Kingsville and Worsham respectively), and about two miles north of "Slate Hill," where Presbytery was meeting. It was agreed to erect "an Academy House, and a Dwelling House for the Superintendent, and other necessary Houses as far as the subscriptions will admit."

On the third day, February 7, 1775, Presbytery formally chose Samuel Stanhope Smith as head of the new Academy, and the proper call was prepared. Although the college had been launched under Presbyterian auspices, it was not to be rigidly sectarian. The historic meeting then adjourned.

Throughout the summer and fall of 1775 there was swift action and in the issue of October 7, 1775, of the Virginia Gazette, there appears an advertisement announcing that "the public Academy in Prince Edward" was expected to open in November, and that it was to be "distinguished by the name of Hampden-Sydney." John Hampden and Algernon Sydney, both English patriots and supporters of religious and constitutional liberties, sacrificed their efforts, their fortunes, and finally their lives in support of these causes for the common people of England. In choosing these men as patron spirits for the new college and naming it Hampden-Sydney, the founding fathers underscored their own devotion to religious and political liberty.

The announcement that the college would open November 10, 1775, was optimistic, and the opening was delayed until January 1, 1776. Meanwhile, Presbytery again met at Captain Nathaniel Venable's on November 8, 1775, to hear Samuel Smith's report on how he had disbursed the funds allocated in February for the purchase of books and apparatus. At this meeting several more men were added to the Board of Trustees which had been appointed in February. With the new additions the first Board of Hampden-Sydney was made up of the Rev. Richard Sankey, John Todd, Samuel Leake, Caleb Wallace, Peter Johnston, Col. Paul Carrington, Col. John Nash, Jr., Capt. John Morton, Capt. Nathaniel Venable, Col. Thomas Read, James Venable, Francis Watkins, Col. Patrick Henry, Col. John Tabb, Col. William Cabell, and Col. James Madison, Jr.

This Board met on November 10 and planned for the opening of college. The action of the Board is reflected in an advertisement appearing in the Virginia Gazette for December 9, 1775:

Hampden-Sydney, Nov. 23, 1775

At a meeting of the Trustees of this Academy, held on the 10th Instant, Captain Philip Halcombe was elected Steward — the Steward is appointed to furnish good and wholesome Diet to the Students; one Half of the Meat at least to be fresh, and one Half of the Bread to be made of fine flour of Wheat. And he obliges himself to furnish Servants to keep their Rooms clean and in good order, for which services he is to receive at the rate of eight pounds Currency per annum; forty shillings of this always to be paid at the beginning of the year, to enable him to procure good provisions, and at a cheap Rate. The students will be obliged to provide their own Beds, or to pay a moderate Hire for them, and to buy their own Candles, and Washing, which they may do at a small expense. For some years they will be permitted to take their Wood off the Land belonging to the Academy, gratis. I have the pleasure to inform the public, that notwithstanding the principal Building of the Academy is at present so incomplete, the Steward will remove his Family thither immediately; and before the 1st of January he will be able, with the Assistance of a few neighbors, who live well and are within less than two miles of Hampden-Sydney, to accommodate all the young Gentlemen who may be put under my care. I presume we shall not need the Assistance of the Neighborhood longer than till next Summer, when the Buildings will be erected.

Though not mentioned in the advertisement, Smith had also supplied an excellent faculty, most of them recent graduates of Princeton. The first faculty was composed of Samuel Smith himself, his brother John Blair Smith, David Witherspoon, Samuel Doak, and John Springer — a distinguished group. In later years Samuel Smith was to be a member of the Princeton faculty and then its president; John Blair Smith to be the first president of Union College (N.Y.); David Witherspoon, a prominent lawyer in New Bern, North Carolina; Samuel Doak, an educational pioneer in Tennessee; and John Springer to be a pioneer preacher and teacher in Georgia. With this faculty Hampden-Sydney opened on January 1, 1776.

Because Hampden-Sydney was called an "Academy" when it was founded, it is by some erroneously supposed that it was a preparatory school until it was chartered as a college in 1783. Hampden-Sydney came into existence at a time when the energies of the country were directed toward securing its independence from England, and when on Saturday, November 16, 1776, the Trustees petitioned the General Assembly for a charter, they did not urge the matter because of "the more important exigencies of the Commonwealth." It is to be noted that in this 1776 petition the institution is referred to as "Hampden-Sydney College." When these "more important exigencies" had been settled, the Board again in 1783 petitioned the General Assembly for a charter, and this was granted on May 19, 1783. Hampden-Sydney still operates under this 1783 charter, it having been amended only once — in 1919.

Hampden-Sydney thus has operated as a college from its opening day, though in its early years there was a preparatory department serving as a "feeder." In this respect also Hampden-Sydney was following the lead of Princeton. In 1775 Samuel Stanhope Smith became the head of a liberal arts college which was to be operated in the same manner and to offer the same curriculum as the elder sister in New Jersey. The curriculum is mentioned in the November 12, 1774, minutes of Presbytery, and it was to include Latin, Greek, History, Geography, among other subjects, but a more specific statement of the type of curriculum is made by Smith himself in the Virginia Gazette: "The system of education will resemble that which is adopted in the College of New Jersey, save that a more particular attention shall be paid to the cultivation of the English language than is usually done in places of public education."

For the first few months in 1776 it is supposed that the students were housed with the families who lived in the vicinity and in certain temporary structures. George Craghead, one of the first students, wrote as follows: "In May, 1776 the walls of the Academy were about three feet high and on account of scarcity of room for the students to study in, they obtained leave from the undertaker, Mr. Coleman, to erect little huts with the shingles that were intended to cover the Academy. They were packed like a sugar loaf, with a plank for three or four boys to sit upon; and in the night a candle being placed in each hut, there being eight or ten, it showed how intent the inhabitants were in studying till 9 or 10 o'clock at night. That year the students devoted their time to study; very little was spent in recreation or amusement." Even so, incomplete though the buildings were, by the summer of 1776, 110 students were enrolled at Hampden-Sydney.

In the next few years, however, the college buildings were completed, a lottery having been authorized in 1777 to help raise funds for that purpose. One building was an auditorium, a one-story wooden building, forty by twenty-five feet, and the main college building, a three-story brick building, was called the "wonder of the day." As such it was described by Hugh Blair Grigsby in the centennial address of 1876, when he was reminiscing of the college as he had known it in 1815. He stated of this main building, "Travellers would turn aside to see it, and it was undoubtedly the largest brick structure reared by Protestant hands (circa 1783) in the cause of education between the falls of James River and the Pacific Ocean." There was also a house which was erected for the president. These old buildings have long since disappeared. The wood auditorium burned, and the old college building was torn down when the new college hall (now Cushing Hall) was built in the 1820's.

The students may have devoted their time to study as Craghead states, but as the Revolution developed, the students formed a company and prepared to do what they could in the struggle for liberty. The college might well expect her students to follow the examples of Hampden and of Sydney. John Blair Smith was chosen captain of the company, David Witherspoon its lieutenant, and Samuel Venable, ensign. All students over sixteen, about sixty-five in number, became members of the company. Their uniform included a "hunting shirt dyed purple."

This company was called into service about the first of September, 1777. At that time an invasion by the British was anticipated, and the Governor of Virginia requisitioned a company of militia from Prince Edward to help oppose this expected invasion. The Hampden-Sydney students became Prince Edward Company No. 1, and with their own officers marched to Williamsburg. Here they remained for a number of weeks until it became obvious that the feared invasion of Virginia would not develop at that particular time. The Governor thanked the members of the Hampden-Sydney Company, and sent them back to their books. In the next year the Hampden-Sydney Company was again called up for duty and served at this time near Petersburg.

Though the college remained in session through the Revolution, it is obvious that the work of the students was frequently interrupted; therefore it was not until after peace had come and the charter had been granted that Hampden-Sydney's first degrees were granted. In 1786 the degree of Bachelor of Arts was awarded to eight young men: Kemp Plummer, David Meade, James Watt, Ebenezer and Thomas McRoberts, Nash LeGrand, John W. Eppes, and Thomas Turpin. All of these men became distinguished in public life.

From 1786 until 1820 the college was under the presidencies of John Blair Smith (who succeeded his brother Samuel Stanhope in 1779 when the first president returned to Princeton as professor of Moral Philosophy), Drury Lacy, Archibald Alexander (who became president of Princeton Seminary in 1812), and Moses Hoge. President Hoge died in 1820, and temporarily the college was operated by a committee of the Board, while a new president was being sought.

Fortunately the Board did not have to seek far; there was a man at hand ready to take over the affairs of the college and bring strength where it was needed. This man was Jonathan P. Cushing, the first president of the college who was neither a Presbyterian nor a minister. With Cushing's administration the second period of the development of Hampden-Sydney College was inaugurated. Cushing, a graduate of Dartmouth, had come south for his health, it being his plan to settle in the far south and set up practice as a lawyer. When he got as far as Richmond he broke his journey for a rest, and while in Richmond he made the acquaintance of several alumni of Hampden-Sydney College who, in turn, introduced him to John Holt Rice, a former tutor at the college, who had returned to the ministry and was, in 1817, the time of Cushing's visit in Richmond, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. Being impressed very much with Cushing, and desiring to see him associated with Hampden-Sydney in some capacity, John Holt

Rice had prevailed upon him to take temporarily the place of a sick tutor at Hampden-Sydney, and so in 1817 Cushing had come to Prince Edward County, planning to remain for a short time as instructor before continuing his journey southwards. Once he had arrived, however, he became, through his qualities of excellence, a permanent member of the faculty, and in 1819 he was made Professor of Natural Philosophy and Chemistry. Two years later the Board elected him president, and he remained both professor and president until shortly before his untimely death in 1835 at the age of 42.

During his administration, the campus of Hampden-Sydney took basically its present form with the erection in 1823-25 of Cushing Hall, while at the same time, across the way a quarter of a mile to the south the buildings of the Union Theological Seminary were being erected. John Holt Rice had followed his friend Cushing to Prince Edward, and while Cushing was building Hampden-Sydney, Rice was building the new seminary. Union Seminary was set up under the charter of Hampden-Sydney and though the institutions were separate entities, they existed side by side for over sixty years.

President Cushing also added to the endowment of the college and increased the staff, and though his death was a grievous blow, the strength of his administration was such that the college was still enjoying its effects as late as 1883 when what may be called the modern period of the college began.

One of Hampden-Sydney's best known instructors took up his duties as a professor in 1836. This was Dr. John William Draper (1811-1882), an Englishman who came to America and settled for a while in Mecklenburg County. He had received a scientific education in England and while there had written and published several papers on geology. In 1836 the Mineralogy Society of Virginia selected him as the first chemist and mineralogist of the Society. In the same year he was called to Hampden-Sydney as a member of the faculty, and he served as such until 1839 when he left Virginia to accept a like position at New York University. While at Hampden-Sydney Dr. Draper experimented with light and with photography, producing the first complete portrait of a person ever recorded with normal light.

Through the forties and fifties Hampden-Sydney pursued the even tenor of her ways with a student body averaging something over one hundred members. During this time the first fraternity chapters were established and Lewis H. Greene, great-grandfather of Adlai Stevenson, was president. Greene's administration, lasting from 1848 until 1856, was a progressive one.

The president who has remained longest in office was John M. P. Atkinson, who served from 1857 until 1883. It was his lot to guide the college through the years of the Civil War and through the Reconstruction days. He did a remarkable job, for many colleges were closed during this period. Dr. Atkinson was able to keep Hampden-Sydney operating, although there were no graduates between 1863 and 1866.

Just as Hampden-Sydney students had formed a company for service during the Revolution, they likewise formed a company at the outbreak of the Civil War. This company, created after the secession of Virginia in April, 1861, chose as its captain Dr. Atkinson, president of the college. The company was called the "Hampden-Sydney Boys," and the members wore the letters H.S.B. on the bands of their caps. Two students who were familiar with the manual of arms began to drill the company, and the drill shortly became the most popular college activity, not only with the young ladies of the community who would gather to applaud the maneuvers, but with the students themselves, though they would grumble at times over an occasional march at double-quick time to the Court House, two miles away. Eventually the company was ordered to report to a camp in Richmond for training. In his reminiscences of the "Hampden-Sydney Boys," Taxewell McCorkle, who served as third lieutenant, wrote as follows of the departure from college:

"The young soldiers in their new uniforms seemed conscious of the great responsibility thrust so suddenly upon them; and each girl believed her love a born hero. Valuables, watches, photographs, rings, that were brought from faraway homes in some instances, were now committed to the care of the fair ones . . . One girl boasted after the fond farewells were over and the boys gone, that she had a box full of watches, rings, etc. The company marched to Farmville, and awaited at the station the coming of the train.

The Farmville Guards and Prince Edward Troop had already reported. Trains were passing loaded with troops from Virginia and other parts of the South, bands played 'Dixie,' the 'Marseillaise,' and other inspiring strains. While we waited the boys were busy leaving souvenirs, tokens, etc., and the girls were scratching names on canteens, tin cups, and pewter spoons. As we heard the whistle of our train, the girls en masse gathered around Captain Atkinson and were showering kisses on him. A lieutenant looked on a while until his 'best girl' approached, when he offered to relieve Captain Atkinson of this part of his arduous duties. 'I can stand the firing yet, lieutenant; if it becomes too heavy, I'll call on you.'"

In Richmond the company was attached to the 20th Virginia Regiment under Col. John Pegram, and orders were received to join General Garnett in Pendleton County (now West Virginia). Here on June 10, 1861, the Battle of Rich Mountain was fought, a Southern defeat, and Col. Pegram surrendered on June 11. The Hampden-Sydney Boys and Captain Atkinson were kindly treated by General McClellan and they were paroled as honorable prisoners of war. When exchange was made, most of the boys joined other commands and President Atkinson returned to his duties at the college.

During the progress of the war, later students at Hampden-Sydney organized another company, again with President Atkinson as captain. This company was under the command of General Kemper. It is stated by George B. Morton of the class of 1867 that this company was ordered out to meet several raiding parties that had the destruction of the railroad in view. They were sometimes in camp for several weeks.

Nearly 500 alumni of the college were in the Confederate Army and one fifth of these lost their lives.

President Atkinson's administration marked the close of the second period of Hampden-Sydney's history. Dr. William H. Whiting (1862-1949), who for many years was the Blair professor of Latin at Hampden-Sydney, was a member of the class of 1880, at a time when Dr. Atkinson's administration was coming to a close. In his reminiscences of life at Hampden-Sydney between 1877 and 1880, Dr. Whiting describes a faculty of five men who taught a hard and fast curriculum which had no electives. President Atkinson acted as professor of mental and moral philosophy; Dr. Walter Blair taught Latin and German; Dr. Addison Hoge, Greek and French; Dr. Lewis Littlepage Holladay was professor of chemistry and natural philosophy; and Delaware Kemper, professor of mathematics and engineering. English studies were conducted by Professors Atkinson, Kemper, and Holladay. In 1880, however, an English department was created and W.S. Currell was appointed first professor of the English language. Dr. Whiting's summation of this era was that though the curriculum was narrow it was thoroughly covered. "It was a high privilege," he adds, "for students to be instructed by and associated with such preceptors — men whose ideas were high and whose influence was wholesome."

In 1883 Dr. Atkinson died and was succeeded by Dr. Richard McIlwaine. In Dr. McIlwaine's administration the curriculum was expanded and, among others, a chair of physics was established, long to be occupied by Dr. John Hampden Chamberlayne Bagby, for who Bagby Hall is named. Dr. Bagby was a son of George W. Bagby, the famous Virginia editor and author.

One of the most important occurrences of Dr. McIlwaine's presidency was the gift to Hampden-Sydney of the property of Union Theological Seminary. In the 1890's the Seminary, which for over sixty years had been Hampden-Sydney's next door neighbor, decided to move from Prince Edward County to Richmond and the Seminary offered to sell its property to Hampden-Sydney. Major Richard Morton Venable, a lawyer in Baltimore, an alumnus of the college, and a descendant of Captain Nathaniel Venable, bought the Seminary property and presented it to the college. By this means the Seminary building and a number of residences came into the hands of the college. The old Seminary building was renamed Venable Hall in honor of the family which from the earliest days has meant so much to Hampden-Sydney.

Dr. Joseph D. Eggleston, long a prominent educator in Virginia, left the presidency of V.P.I. in 1919, and came to Hampden-Sydney. With Dr. Eggleston's administration the modern Hampden-Sydney came into existence — physically with the building of Bagby and Morton Halls; academically with the development of the present curriculum; and spiritually with closer ties to the Synod of Virginia. Morton Hall, a classroom building, was the gift of Samuel Packwood Morton of Baltimore in memory of his ancestor, Captain John Morton, one of the original trustees of Hampden-Sydney. At Dr. Eggleston's retirement in 1939 Hampden-Sydney had grown from a student body of 158 with a faculty of 9 in 1919 to a student body of 351 with a faculty of 20.

FRESHMAN CLASS

Memories Of The Twenties

By Dr. Graves H. Thompson

We freshmen entering Hampden-Sydney (it was spelled — Sidney in those days) in the fall of 1923 met with equivocal hospitality. Late in the first week of classes we enjoyed the traditional YMCA reception, being treated to a well-meant but agonizing receiving line of professors and their wives, along with other pillars of the community, and to the more enjoyable refreshments, of which Hampden-Sydney has always had an abundance. The net effect was a warm glow of feeling welcome. But an hour or two later, at 10 o'clock as I remember, the other side of college hospitality emerged, like the scowling mask of Greek tragedy. The college bell, which then was located in a little shed-like structure in front of Cushing Hall, rang furiously, and there came in response a great shout of sophomores from all over the campus. As the freshmen had been warned, it was required that they assemble in the chapel of old McIlwaine Hall (now deceased), which stood near Cushing. This was a "taking-in," the first of a series that was to continue at all too frequent intervals during the college year.

The procedure that was generally followed was a roll call of freshmen assembled; possible harangues by sophomore officers; practice of the college cheers and songs, which would be lustily exhibited at football games. After that, the freshmen were hustled out, arranged in a single line extending along the front of Cushing and facing that building. They were ordered to bend over, "assuming the angle" (about 80 degrees). The members of the sophomore class, supplemented by some of the more belligerent upper classmen, would then proceed down the line swinging their paddles onto the posteriors of the bowed and cowed freshmen. One blow per man to each posterior was the custom. Some of the paddle-wielders were gentle, more quite lusty. With a little experience the freshmen learned to jostle for places in the middle of the line, as it came to be observed that the sophomores as they started out were feeling strong and could give a good lick. They would weary somewhat as they proceeded, but as they neared the end of the line they would try to get in a few last hard blows.

The third section of the night's procedure was a chase down one of the roads leading from the campus, towards Kingsville or Five Forks, sophomores urging on their prey with savage shouts and paddles. The victims would gradually manage to slip off in the dark into the fields or woods, and eventually make their weary way back to their quarters after a cautious wait.

Certain faces in these exciting chases still remain in my memory, as that of one "moonlight" Denton, a particularly vigorous harrier, and Ewell Wiley, a more gentle sort.

These "takings-in", supposed to be sort of an initiation into the Hampden-Sydney student community, occurred, as I have said, throughout the year at the whim of sophomore leaders or as certain freshmen might have been guilty of "grossness", and the whole class was made to suffer. The event might come at several weeks' interval or on successive nights. One was never sure when the dreaded bell would ring out in the late evening and the freshmen hordes be rounded up. To be absent at roll call could result in a personal visit by a posse of sophomores, with unpleasant results.

One planned freshmen revolt before one of these occurrences, when they were to assemble in a body and secede from the campus, was nipped in the bud when the secret leaked out, as from a Congressional committee, and the members of the class were rounded up severally, brought to old Graham gymnasium, and there paddled a little more severely than usual.

It was a point of pride with our class of 1927 that the following year, in 1928, we virtually did away with the "taking-in". There was an initial one at the beginning of the year, for form's sake, and one at the end of the year that declared the class of '28 true Hampden-Sydney men, with maybe one in between for some bit of gross behavior. Substituted was the Vigilance Committee, consisting of three sophomores, two juniors, and one senior (for mature guidance, I suppose). It was they that visited merited retribution on any freshman whose name was handed in for any kind of insubordination or freshness or "grossness". After some kind of trial, the proper number of paddle-blows would be administered by the experts, usually the heftiest members of the sophomore class.

In those days the lower classes had their pictures taken for the Kaleidoscope en masse rather than individually. The freshman class, bedecked in their freshman caps of garnet and gray, would be grouped on the front steps of McIlwaine Hall. As soon as the last picture had been snapped, there would be a great scurrying away from the building, not from fear of the collapse of the building (though according to reports that had been quite likely for years) but because of the buckets of water that the sophomores crowding the windows of the second floor above were waiting to rain down on these innocents in their coats and ties.

The mention of McIlwaine Hall brings back memories both pleasurable and painful. The main floor was occupied mainly by the chapel, outfitted with pews

(one of which may be seen in the Hampden-Sydney Museum) and adequate just about to accommodate our student body of 225-250. The students were seated by classes, freshmen and sophomores placed in the larger sections in the middle, the juniors and seniors on either side in smaller sections. Attendance was checked by monitors. In addition, church attendance was required, either at the College Church or by certification that the student had attended some other church. I think that one reason the church congregation has been loath to sit in the center section of the sanctuary near the front is that that area was committed to the students in attendance, each one having his own pew and place assigned and being checked by the monitors in the balcony.

Chapel services were held each weekday morning at 8:30, before the first class, which began at 9:00. Dr. Joseph Dupuy Eggleston, the president, conducted the services, which consisted of a hymn ("Work, for the Night is Coming" was a favorite just before exams), a scripture lesson, and a short homily. I especially remember talks defending the literal validity of the Jonah and Noah's Ark stories. If Dr. Eggleston was away, his second in command, Dean Macon Reed, would take charge.

At one student body meeting in the chapel, it was proposed to take up a collection to buy a radio, a device that was just coming into prominence. Plates were passed, and some money dropped in. There was a story that one of the seniors, Finley Tynes, took out some cash and put in his I. O. U. for a correspondingly greater amount. As I recall, the radio never materialized.

I think that within a year or so the formal "taking-in" had disappeared from the campus, but when I returned to Hampden-Sydney as a teacher it was continuing in another form. I shall let others who participated in these events describe them, but it consisted of an assemblage of the freshman class in front of Venable Hall, now become the freshman dormitory, a practicing of the songs and yells, and certain forms of harassment, like requiring a "duck walk", I think it was called, wherein the victims had to walk about on their knees while quacking pitifully, and then a chase down to Death Valley for further harassment.

There were those who argued that such hazing was childishly immature and unworthy of college men, or boys. Others claimed that it created class unity and college loyalty. Unquestionably the freshmen did learn the college yells and songs. This has been lost as the hazing finally faded away.

There were other lesser trials that freshmen had to undergo back in the twenties and later. They were not allowed to sit on the college fence, which did not bother them much, especially after an evening with the paddles. Now nobody seems to think of sitting on the college fence — so what?

"Sounding-off" was a minor annoyance. As the whim seized him, any sophomore could command a freshman to "sound off", whereupon the poor fellow was required to beat his chest with alternate fists while declaiming at the top of his voice, "I'm Freshman Thompson from Charleston, West Virginia (or wherever), here to serve the sophomores and study in the meantime. '26!'" (" '26" if one was the class of '27).

Before the football game with the University of Richmond (then the big game of the year), every time a freshman walked past the Alumni Gate (which he would do often McIlwaine Hall being the main center of academic activities), he was obliged to shout "Beat Richmond!", but that was one of the pleasurable activities of the neophyte year.

Dr. J.H.C. Bagby, who was the Physics Department in those days, and a distinguished one, did have a radio in the Science Building (now named after him). Some of us, at his invitation, went to his classroom on the first floor of the building to listen to the election returns of November, 1924, when Coolidge was reelected president. Dr. Bagby tried bravely to bring in the famous Pittsburgh station KDKA, but the elements were not favorable and we never did learn who was winning until the next day.

To get back to McIlwaine Hall. The classrooms were on the second floor, reached by a winding staircase in a kind of tower. There were six of these rooms, arranged on three sides of the central hall. At the far west was the Greek room, with long benches and presided over by Dr. David C. Wilson (a freshman along with me), one of the most popular members of the faculty. Through personal magnetism and subtle pressures and certain graduation requirements he made Greek one of the best populated of the departments. On the northwest corner was the History and English room, with Professor Freeman Hart an inspiring lecturer in the former subject and Dr. Asa Dupuy Watkins a moving one in English. Next came the Modern Language room. Dr. Herman Bell I remember well as my French instructor. Next was the Bible-Psychology-Philosophy-English room, with Dr. J.B. Massey and Dr. Maurice Allan as the great men. In the northeast corner was the mathematics room, where Dean Reed, a most kindly man, held forth. And in the extreme eastern room was Latin, with Dr. W.H. Whiting. All these rooms, of course, were used by other teachers as well.

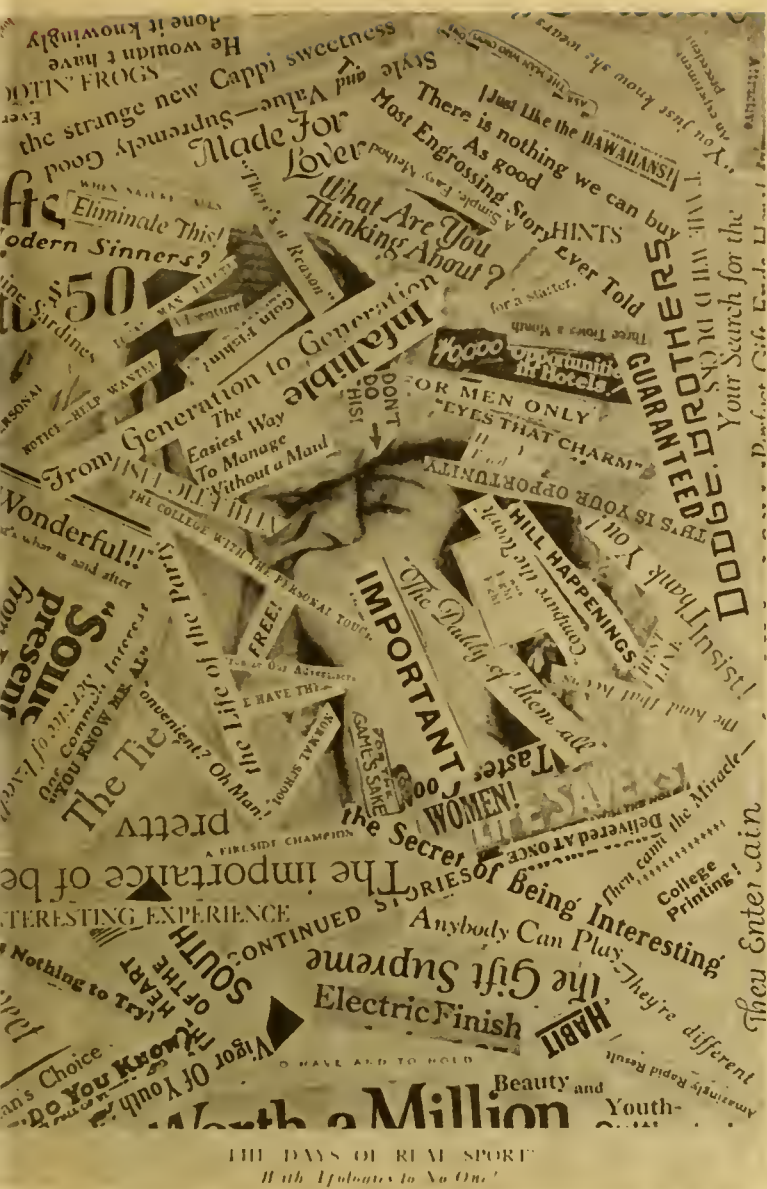

In 1923 the sciences had just moved from the rear of McIlwaine downstairs and from Cushing into the new Science Building (now Bagby), which was the pride of the campus. Dr. Curry Winston was the professor of Chemistry. He eventually established the Hampden-Sydney record for longevity of teaching — fifty years. It was in his class that I first saw the wonder material rayon. He had just brought back some samples of this new product from a plant he had visited. Dr. Winston's approach to chemistry was liberal enough to include one day a week of study of the history of chemistry.

Chemistry, as seems usual (is it because of possible explosions or inevitable odors?), was on the top floor. Professor H.B. Overcash, not long passed from our midst, presided over the Biology classes on the second floor. I was early fascinated by his name, for he was made church treasurer and always seemed to come up with a cash surplus. In those days all students had to have at least two laboratory sciences for graduation, plus two years of mathematics. I never took Biology, I am sorry to say, but it was simply because I did not want to be cutting up animals. I am still squeamish that way.

Professor Overcash was new at the time. For the older generation, the big three of the Hampden-Sydney faculty were Aggie, Bags, and Curry. Aggie was Dr. Whiting. Accounts differed as to how he got that name. Some said that it was an adaptation of Aguinaldo, who had been a Philippine hero in an insurrection against the United States at the turn of the century. Did Dr. Whiting in his younger days have some physical resemblance to that worthy? Others said that the nickname was derived from the Latin verb agere, "to drive", as Dr. Whiting was indeed something of a taskmaster in the classroom, and thereby a great teacher. It was he who taught himself Spanish in order to introduce Spanish classes into the curriculum, and was also available to teach Greek and German.

Bags, of course, was Dr. Bagby. He was slightly lame and one shoe had an especially thick sole, on which he dumped about, using a cane. He had rooms in Hampden House, then called the Lacy House for its boarding house proprietor. When I returned to Hampden-Sydney after his death, it was told me that his ghost could still be heard dumping up and down the stairs there. I imagine his ghost has been exorcised by the recent metamorphosis of the building into the "Hampden-Sydney Club".

Curry Winston had several hobbies. One was watching baseball games at Death Valley. When I returned here to teach he was still driving his car down to participate as a spectator. He was an excellent tennis player, and for some time had his own court. He lived in Merton Place, currently the home of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Whitted. On the lot to the west, where a house now stands, he had an excellent garden, the marvel of the area.

In those days the present baseball field was just a field. Each spring the football field would be converted into the diamond. I remember our freshman class being compelled to scrape off the grass with pieces of slate to clear the infield, which was in the northeast corner. This meant that while left and center fields had a long stretch southward, right field ran up the hill toward the road, with a few trees complicating the situation. We won a game against the University of Richmond in the last of the ninth by a single knocked by Ward "Squat" Palmer up into that area. The terrain was too much for the Richmond outfielder.

Until the 1940's the football field was several feet lower than it is now, with the east side of the present track rising above it. This had been built up for a bed of a projected railroad in the last century. Money ran out and the tracks were never laid, even though the bed had been prepared from Farmville southward past the campus. Traces can still be seen, in places along the back road to Farmville on the right going north, and most prominently in the cut still visible near the Hampden-Sydney sign across the road from Death Valley. There was another cut on beyond the southern church cemetery behind the white residence, and an elevated section exists beyond the Espighs' house, in the woods. Other sections used to be discernible on beyond.

Eventually Death Valley (strictly, Venable Field) was filled in with dirt to bring it up to a level with the running track, and turtle-backed for better drainage.

Miss Susie Venable sat at one end of my table and her sister, Miss Addie (who lived in what is now the Chi Phi House), at the other. Later, a third sister, Miss Emma, presided at the second and lesser table. When a student had finished his meal, he could not just get up and leave. He had to be excused by the lady sitting at his end of the table. I sat closer to Miss Addie. She was quite deaf, but also quite a conversationalist. Her hearing was aided by a sinister-looking black object somewhat resembling a small coffee pot; though when she chose to use it, it did not seem to help much. One still had to shout. Anyway, to be excused from the table it was necessary to catch her eye. If she happened to be talking to someone at the other side of the table, this sometimes required several frustrating minutes. Occasionally, Miss Susie, from her post at the other end of the table, would Tuesdays and Fridays were "Boss Days", when dessert was served. This was ice cream, brought out from Farmville by the gentleman that also, I believe, brought the mail out to the post office. He was Hugh ("Boss") Dunkum. I have always thought that "Boss Days" received their name from his nickname, but recently another alumnus, and former roommate of mine at Harvard, has suggested that it might have been the other way around. He has found the term "Boss" used for dessert at another school, and thinks that Boss Dunkum may have gotten that nickname from his transportation of the ice cream out to Hampden-Sydney. Anyway, the term had died out by the time I returned to Hampden-Sydney to teach in 1939. The boarding houses were also fated to die out shortly thereafter, done in by World War II and the subsequent dearth of affordable labor. It is a pity. Those establishments were schools of manners. The present sloppy behavior, carried to the point of food throwing, would not have been countenanced for a moment. O tempora, O mores!

"TOM"

"Tom" is preeminently a scholar. While the rest of us are "busting out" or just barely making enough work to remain in school, he is quietly making first grades and winning scholarships. Only the hard work of a fertile brain, plus a determination that always assures success, has enabled him to do this and he has won no honor that he does not richly deserve. However, Graves is not only a student but he has taken an active part in activities of all kinds, and in all, the same qualities that brought him success as a student have enabled him to make a name for himself. In summing up his success it might be said, "If pleasure interferes with business, let pleasure go."

It was a pleasure to have no classes except laboratories after the mid-day meal, even though that repast had to be delayed until two o'clock, when classes ended. However, this schedule was upset sometime in the thirties when the college physician declared that it was unhealthy to have dinner at such an odd hour, and the Board of Trustees, I believe, thereupon issued a ukase from above to desist.

Changes in classes were signalled then as now by the tolling of a bell, but the college bell was sheltered in a "tower", really a kind of wood shed, standing in front of Cushing Hall. In those days and much later, of course, there was no electronic bell pealing forth from the cupola of Venable Hall to alert the bell ringer on the ground, (if it is in working order), as today. These men, at least when Morton Hall had become the classroom building, were sympathetic to tardy students trying to make their classes before the bell stopped ringing and the classroom door might be closed to them. Consequently, the bell might continue to ring a valuable few seconds longer, enough to enable the panting boy to make it all the way to the top of Morton, if his class was located there.

One of these highly respected men was Sam Brown, long a prominent figure on the campus. When at last he retired, he was presented a rocking chair and a watch. The former was a timely gift. The second might well have come years sooner, as his timing of class changes during his active career was notably erratic. This led to interesting variety in the class day, as did the clanging of the cow bell heralding the animal who was wont to graze on the campus in the vicinity of Morton. It was the property of the college pastor, whose wife conducted a boarding house for some years.

Envoi

The present has a way of slipping silently away into the past, its colors gradually fading so that only the major outlines are left. In another era of Hampden-Sydney, especially the latter half of the nineteenth century and the early twentieth, individuals took the trouble to record some of their recollections. The earlier issues of The Hampden-Sydney Magazine (now The Gannet), The Kaleidoscope, and The Record contain many memoirs of student life here. The late Dr.

Joseph Dupuy Eggleston, president of the College from 1919 to 1939, was a prolific writer; his collected writings are an invaluable source of information, laced with considerable humor. On the other hand, one thinks with immeasurable regret of the fund of anecdotes and stories, now lost except in the recollections of a few, with which the late Paul Tulane Atkinson, erstwhile College Treasurer, used to regale his enrapt listeners. We never got around to having him use a tape recorder.

With this in mind, it is hoped that these rambling memoirs, which could be extended indefinitely, may serve to give some slight color to the receding past. The third century of Hampden-Sydney should not forget the second.

Dr. Edgar Graham Gammon in his administration carried out further physical improvements for the campus, and like Samuel Smith and J.M.P. Atkinson had to carry the college through very difficult war days. Through his efforts a V-12 unit was placed at Hampden-Sydney in 1943, and so he, like his predecessors, made it possible for the college to keep going in those uncertain days.

The gymnasium was added to the buildings on the campus in 1940 and the Johns Auditorium in 1951, two buildings the college had stood in great need of for years. In 1950 the library (now Winston Hall), which had suffered a disastrous fire in 1941, was reconstructed into one of the handsomest buildings on the campus. Dr. Gammon also gave the college a new water system, put in street lights so that the dark of the moon is not so perilous to noctambulating students as it once was, and also installed a sewage disposal system. Furthermore, during Dr. Gammon's administration the college's permanent endowment was greatly increased and the Alumni Fund was organized.

Recently, under the leadership of Dr. W. Taylor Reveley, the college has been expanded both physically and academically. In 1968 a modern Science Center was completed, and soon afterwards a new dormitory (Whitehouse) and modern infirmary-apartment complex was constructed. Most recently the library was enlarged, doubling its size. Today there are 19 major buildings resting on a spacious 540 acre campus. The curriculum has been diversified and revised to meet the changing needs of the college student. In 1974 a short-term session was initiated to help students accelerate or catch up, and to provide a testing ground for new courses.

Throughout her history, though the curriculum has expanded, the student body itself has grown in numbers, and the physical plant has kept pace, Hampden-Sydney has never lost sight of the aim — "to form good men and good citizens in an atmosphere of sound learning and devotion to the principles of liberty."

The motto of the Hampden family, emblazoned on its coat of arms was "Vestigia Nulla Retrorsum" — "No steps backward." Hampden-Sydney has never adopted this motto as her own officially, but the motto expresses something of the aim of the college, and Hampden-Sydney, proud of her past, lives not in it, but in the present.

Foreword

This year was the 200th birthday of Hampden-Sydney College. In the opening section of this edition of the KALEIDOSCOPE we tried to present a summary of those 200 years using pictures and stories. Obviously we have omitted a large amount of information, but 200 years is a long time to cover in 30 pages. The rest of the book is a summary of what life was like at Hampden-Sydney during 1975-1976.

There are a number of people I would like to thank for helping on this edition of the KALEIDOSCOPE. Acknowledgements are usually the most stale part of a yearbook, but they cannot be left out.

Dr. Ropp from whose essay a great deal of information for the history section was taken

John Brinkley for constructive and not so constructive criticism

Jack Clark who did the majority of the research for the history section

Ben Cart and Ruth Micou who did the typing

Dr. Thompson for his essay on life at Hampden-Sydney during the Twenties

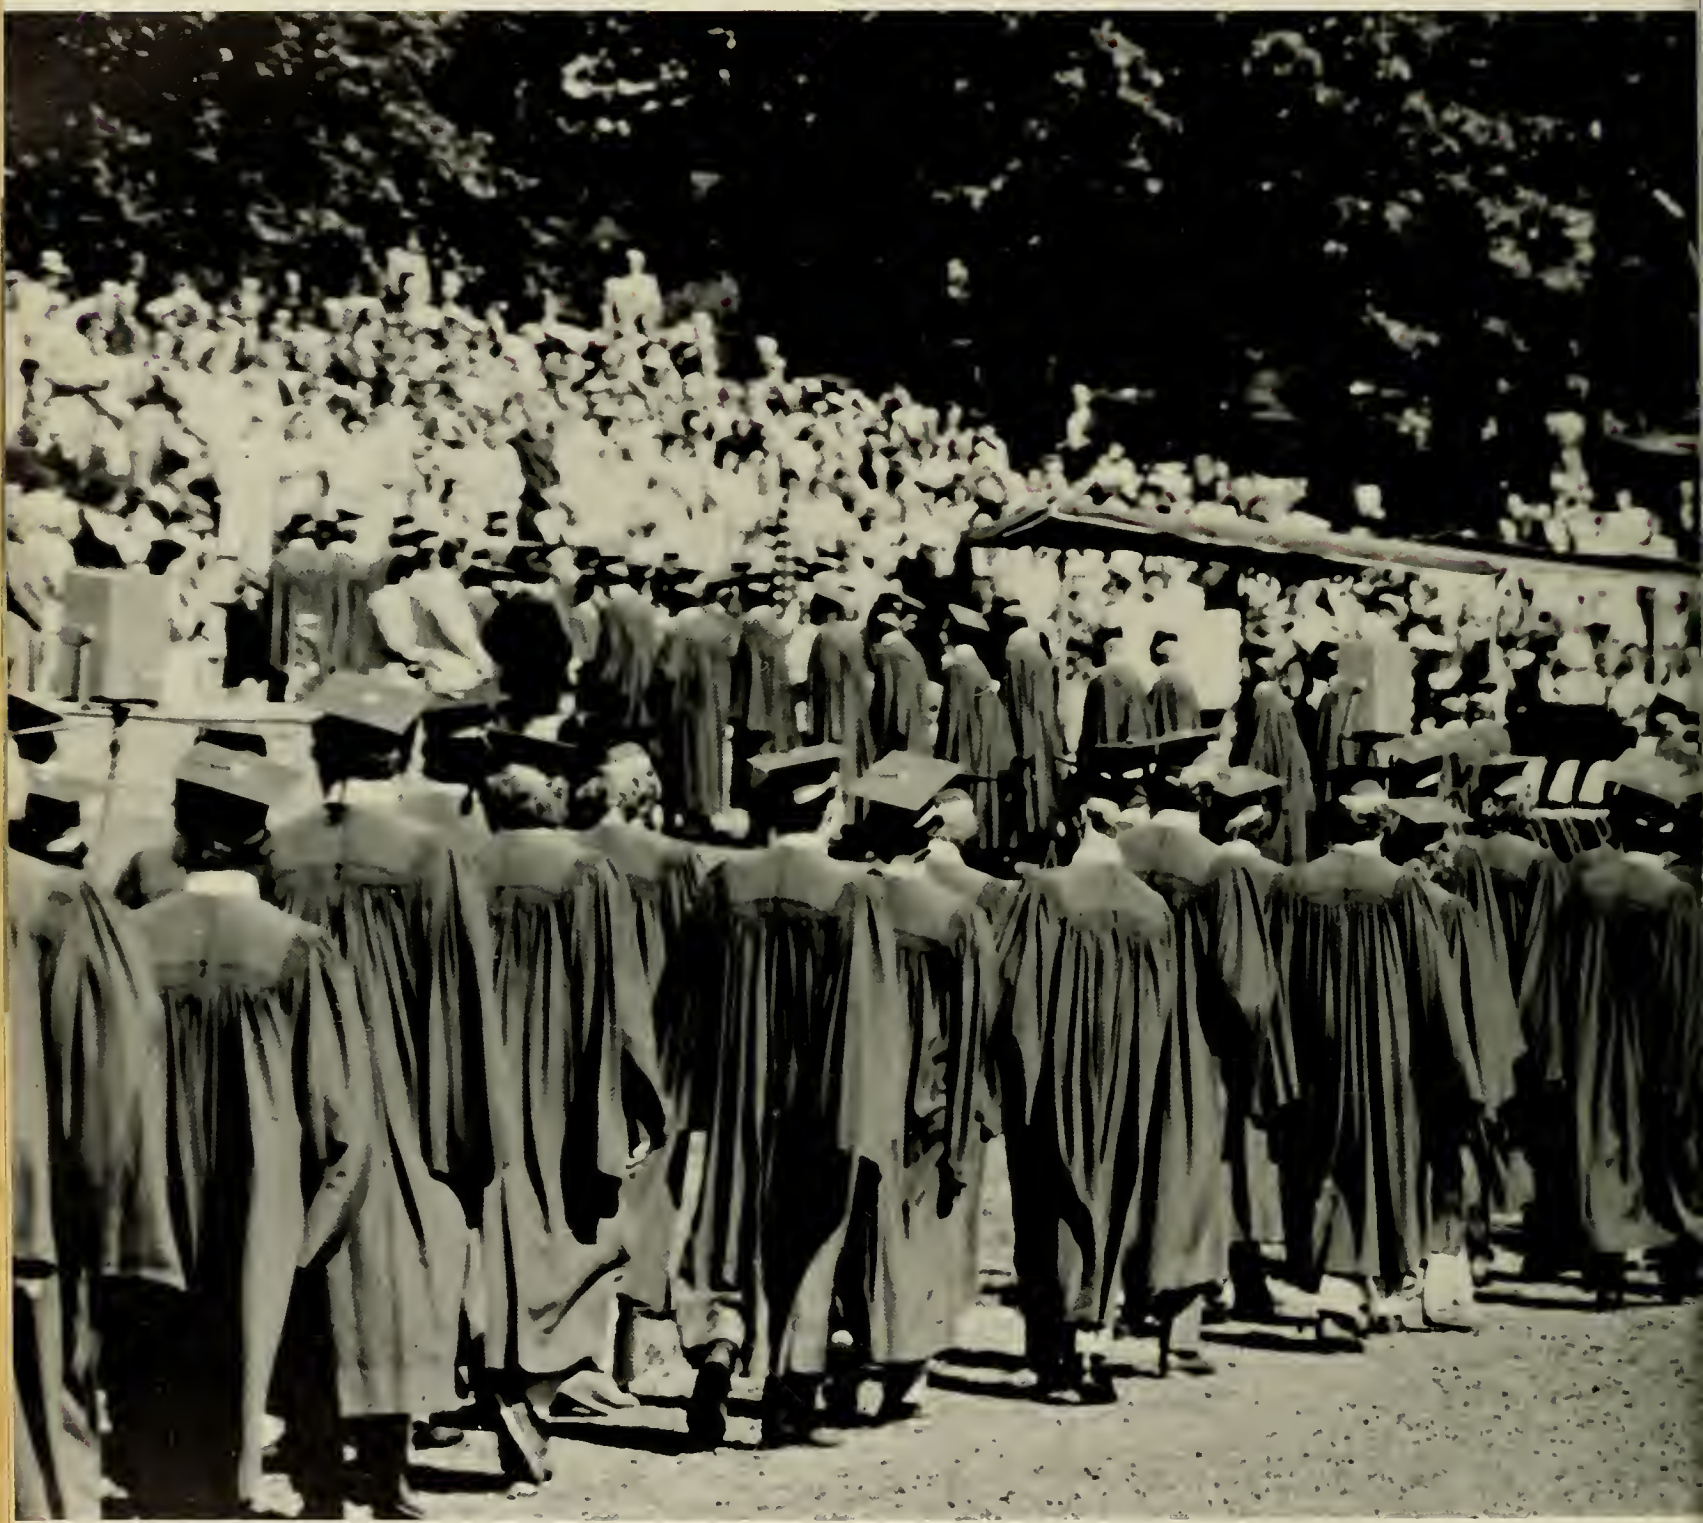

John Perry, who not only is a good drinking buddy, but who helped with layouts and ideas from Hunter Publishing Company

Penny who gave moral support and who brought the beer to the darkroom at 3 A.M.

The 1976 KALEIDOSCOPE is dedicated to the class of 1976. We were the largest freshmen class that has come to Hampden-Sydney, and we were the largest graduating class to leave.

The Story of Joe Kool

Hampden-Sydney Student

The story of Joe Kool, student at Hampden-Sydney. Joe came to Hampden-Sydney (hereinafter named HSC) wanting to be a doctor. He was in love with medicine. Well anyway he was in love with the idea of becoming Joe H. Kool, M.D. When he came to HSC, he saw the palace. Hereinafter called the PAL. Now he was in love with PAL. too. He became Joe Kool, premed student. Howsomever he soon learned that it was work in the palace (or PAL.) The professors had the strange notion that the way into med school was by work, good hard work. Continuous work. And Joe thought that wasn't kool. Or Joe thought that wasn't kool enough for him. There must be some easier way to become a doctor. Some way other than work. Never mind that one day his patients (hereinafter named pats or patsies) would suffer from the fact that he didn't learn about autoklaves and testtubes and all that good stuff. Or even the worthwhile things because he was too busy being Joe Kool. There must be a better way thought Joe. A cooler way. So wanting to be a doctor but not wanting to work he looked around for another department in which to major. He looked at history, but they had a thesis and that spelled work. And his name was kool not work. And he looked at math but it didn't compute. And he looked all over. He even looked at greek. Anyway he heard that there were some kool kats in the psych department. And the professors weren't too gosh awful either kompared to some of their equally weird colleagues. So he would be a psych major. But he still loved medicine. He couldn't even spell it obviously. Nah he didn't love medicine, he loved the idea of becoming Joe H. Kool M.D. So he became voila! Joe Kool, premed psych major. And he took the psych courses. He tried to get out of physiological, which wasn't a logical thing for a premed to do but for Joe Kool it was what he thought was kool because he thought it would be a hard course. And he tried to get out of any other course he heard was hard. And he tried to avoid professors on courses they graded hard on. And he avoided professors in those smesters (he couldn't spell semesters either) when they were grading hard. But somehow voila! He managed to become a senior. Joe Kool, senior premed psych major. Sounded great. Like in India when you get to take the exams for a B.A. and fail it is still an honor to have been allowed to try the eaxma (he couldn't spell exams either) and write Joe Kool, B.A. — failed behind your name. So he could now write Joe Kool premed psych major senior behind his name. And he took the medcats. Somebody had to explain to him first though that the medcats weren't a rock group. Any way he took them. Or they took him, if you know what i mean. And Joe wasn't so kool anymore. But what the blazes, tests don't prove anything. And he applied to emseevee only they spelled it MCV which he couldn't understand either, but that figures. MCV was nice. The dean was nice. They told Joe he was kool. But they had so many many many applicants that they could only take the most competitive but they were sure he would get in somewhere. So was Joe. And UVA (pronounced you vee eh) interviewed Joe. Where did you go to college they asked? HSC he said. You know, Hampden-Sydney. They hadn't heard of it or something. Hampden-Sydney he said. Oh yes yes they said. You're a preppie. And where did you attend kollege Joe Kool they said? And Joe tried to explain that we had a Rhodes Scholar at Hampden-Sydney (he thought it was spelled Rhoads like Miller and) which was good since VMI had only 8 of them and 1 nobel peace prize winner. And after all everybody knows that they're a basketball school. Well to make a long story shorter, you vee eh wasn't interested in Joe Kool. He tried out of state schools. He tried out of country schools. He tried out of sight schools. He tried out of mind schools. All were polite. Some were real polite. Joe Kool they said, you're kool but you're not our type. Fianlly (he cound:t spell finally either, or couldn't for that matter) He thought of his friends his dear friends in the psych department and the professors too. I think he spelled professors with 2 f's and 1 s but never mind. Couldn't they get him into psych school? But they told him to read the book of genesis. They had to explain what the book of genesis was. He started reading it. Laboriously! you know he couldn't ever get over a D in English even 105. But finally he came to the part where the people became slaves after they had had it so good in Egypt. And he found the passage, "there was a new Pharaoh in the land and he knew not Joseph." And Joe Kool found that the professors in his major didn't even know his name for he had been such a wraith and had floated in and out of their courses and though technically a major his heart was not in psychology. Oh they tried to get him in somewhere but they had to tell the truth. And the truth was, you guessed it, the truth was that as a prospective psychologist, which Joe could not spell either, he was not kool. You might say he had blown it. He wasn't kool.
